District No. 1. The school numbers more than for several years past. Miss H. had taught in the district before, and it should be said, to her credit, that she fully sustained her former good reputation. The school appeared well. Miss T. is a young and inexperienced teacher, of good attainments and earnest for success. The result proved that her labors were well directed. The school made commendable improvement.

No. 2. This school is diminishing in numbers from year to year. Miss P. interested her scholars in their studies, told them a great many valuable truths, and let the younger ones go out whenever it was necessary, I guess. This is the second term she has taught this school, giving general satisfaction. The school, the winter term, under the instruction of Mr. A., a competent and promising teacher, gave evidence of having been well taught, and under good discipline, and also of having been very studious. A profitable term.

No. 3. Miss F., teacher both terms, whose praise is in all the families of the district. Her method of instruction and government admirable, her influence elevating and ennobling. True progress noticeable. Cases of insubordination occurred, which, however, were squarely met and promptly put down, without any compromise of dignity or authority on the part of the teacher.

No. 4. Miss M. continues to secure the confidence and good will of her pupils, as well of their parents. This was her second term in this district, and with no diminution of interest. Scholars quiet and studious, and made good progress. Miss G. is an active and enterprising teacher, of considerable experience, thorough in her instruction, gentle yet decided in her government, and performs her duties in the school-room with apparent ease. Her scholars earnestly engaged in their proper work, and with grand results.

No. 5. This continues to be a small school. Miss W. is a faithful teacher. The scholars studious, though rather lonely sometimes. Examination at the close of the term very satisfactory. It is to be hoped that the two panes of glass, which have been out all winter, will have their places supplied before the next term.

No. 6. This school was favored with several scholars from out of the district, who proved an advantage to the school. Mr. M. brings to the work a rich experience, much energy and perseverance, and actually performs more labor than is usually expected of teachers, and more than most teachers venture to attempt. Scholars were interested in their studies, and made good advancement in practical knowledge. Self-government to some extent was adopted, with favorable results. Map-drawing, music, and gymnastics were successfully taught.

No. 7. This district clings to the old school-house yet, which has an arrangement for ventilation which in a cold, windy day is decidedly inconvenient for teacher, scholars, or visitors. Miss C. fully sustained her previously well earned good reputation in this district. Scholars were well taught; could answer questions when asked by strangers as well as when asked by the teacher, which pupils sometimes fail to do. Miss H. met with excellent success in the winter term, teaching her pupils much not found in the text book. Her method of instruction and discipline commendable. A very profitable term.

No. 8. This was Miss W.'s first school, and the degree of success attending her efforts was truly encouraging. Gymnastics and vocal music were practised. School quiet and orderly, and made creditable improvement. Miss M. found the school, in the winter, for the most part, a pleasant one. Her earnest efforts to teach were seconded by honest efforts on the part of her pupils to learn. She insisted upon order, and obedience to the rules of school from all, the older as well as the younger, which was very generally cheerfully rendered. One of the older boys, rather than be obedient to reasonable rules, or submit to the penalty for their violation, left the school a short time before its close.

No. 9. Miss S. had the advantage, with the disadvantage also, of teaching in her own district. It was noticeable that the scholars answered questions better when the teacher asked them, than when questioned by the committee. The school made very fair progress in their studies. Miss Smith, teacher winter term, had taught several terms in town with uniform success. Her attainments and method of instruction are excellent; but I think she failed to satisfy herself in the government of the school, which contains some large and not very easily managed boys, albeit real progress in knowledge was made.

No. 10. The school in this district is not large, and there is quite a difference in the capacity and attainments of the pupils. Very good order prevailed and fair progress in studies made, considering that there was but one term during the year.

No. 11. The plan in this district was to have but one term of school, commencing about the first of September. The first teacher was said to be homesick, and remained only a few days.

After an interval of a few weeks, another young lady was placed in charge of the school, who voluntarily retired at the close of the second week. Finally, Mr. Curry was secured, and taught an excellent school for seven weeks—while the money lasted. Scholars behaved with propriety, manifested a good degree of interest in their studies, and made excellent improvement for so short a term. A new school-house is very much needed in this district.

No. 12. Miss B. took charge of this school Oct. 25. A few days after, it was visited by the committee, and found to be quiet and fairly begun. The next intelligence I had concerning the school was, that the teacher had been dismissed and had gone home. I understand that the patrons of the school, generally, think it was of but little account. The scholars, in care of Miss G. for five weeks, were manifestly interested in their studies, and acquired quite as much knowledge as would be expected, considering the shortness of the term.

No. 13. The one term of school is now in session. It is understood that Miss E. is meeting with good success. We find no new school-house in this district yet.

No. 14. A quiet and orderly school. Both the teachers had taught in the district before, and their success furnishes no occasion for regret that they were engaged the second time. Gymnastics practised, the summer term.

A true education has regard to the proper development of the whole being—the physical, intellectual, and moral natures. The idea is somewhat prevalent that the teacher of the common school has to do only with the intellectual; if he aids the scholar to understand the science, his work is done. A great want of the present age is honest men. We have men fitted, by their intellectual ability and attainments, for almost any position in life; but many of these men are sadly deficient in common honesty: they are not worthy to be trusted in responsible positions. They have but little, if any, regard for the right because it is right, and they hesitate not to cheat their fellow-men, or the government they profess to serve, at every opportunity. True reform must strike at the root of the matter.

If we would have honest men, we must aim to have honest boys. Let the children, let all the children in our common schools, then and there, as well as at home, be taught to cherish a love for the truth and for the right, and to regard any deviation from strict integrity of character and uprightness in life as degrading and wrong. Were such the case, a glorious future would be before us. And should any teacher aim at anything less than this?

Prudential committees might have an understanding with each other, and with teachers of acknowledged ability, so that the same teacher might teach the schools in two or more districts, beginning one a little earlier and another a little later than the usual time. It would be better to suffer a little inconvenience as to the time of school, if by so doing a superior teacher could be engaged.

The schools this year, as a whole, have been better than those of last year. Reading and spelling have been attended to by all the scholars, and marked improvement noticed, especially in reading. All, perhaps, of suitable age and capacity, have attended to arithmetic, geography, grammar, and writing. The last-named needs more attention given to it in almost all our schools. A few of the scholars have studied book-keeping, history, philosophy, and algebra. It is lamentably true that a large number of instances of tardiness still occur in many of our schools, as may be seen by referring to the statistical table in this report: a serious evil. Ought not parents to correct it?

A copy of the law enacted by the Legislature, last June session, entitled "An act to compel children to attend school," was posted in three public places in each district in town, as by law required.

The teachers in districts Nos. 3, 5, 6, and for the first term in Nos. 4 and 12, and the second term in No. 14, reckoned only five days for a week; all the other teachers reckoned five and a half days for a week, which is the measure adopted in the statistical table of this report. Consequently, prudential committees may notice that their schools are reported shorter, and the wages per month higher, than they bargained for. There is a difference of one week in eleven.

An evil which is the source of many others still exists. It is allowing the scholars to have charge of the school-house and other district property, for an hour or two each day. No prudent house-keeper would think of leaving her parlor, dining-room, or kitchen in charge of twenty or thirty children, gathered indiscriminately from the families of the neighborhood, to do as they pleased, for a half hour even, one day in a week. As long as this custom prevails we may expect to find in the school-room broken benches, desks, settees, chair, tables, doors, and stoves, and a general smashing up of things.

I would suggest that it would be better for the boys and girls to have their recess separate; better for boys and girls to sit, for their regular seats in the school-room, at different desks; better for pupils to recite by turns, as a general rule, rather than indis-criminally, or in concert; better for scholars to accustom themselves to work examples in mathematics on the blackboard, without the book before them. It is well for the scholars to give attention to the abbreviations, and not forget the rules for punctuation. It is well for the teacher, at the close of the spelling lesson, to pronounce to the class the words in the next lesson, or require the scholars to do so. A review, each day, of the preceding lesson, and a general review at the close of the term, to which the parents should be invited, are recommended.

I believe not one of the 3,637,442 persons in the United States, who are reported unable to read, is found in Campton.

We have already been benefited by the State Normal School, in the practical instruction there given to some of the teachers and advanced scholars who have attended, and also in the increased interest in the cause of education awakened in the community. It is hoped that those who design to teach in our schools, especially the young and inexperienced, will attend the Normal School.

Respectfully submitted :

QUINCY BLAKELY,

School Committee.
